A Visit to Saanich Archives

Welcome to Saanich Archives!

Located in the Saanich Centennial Library since 2007, Saanich Archives invites you to visit and explore our collection of photos, maps, art, news clippings, and documents.

Come inside to learn more about the cultural history of the Municipality of Saanich. On your way into the Archives is an interpretive panel about the history of local First Nations.

Saanich Archives acknowledges with respect the WSÁNEĆ and Lekwungen peoples on whose traditional territory the Archives stands and whose historical relationships with the land continue to this day.

Upon entering the Archives, you will be greeted by staff in the reference room. This room houses our collections of published material and reference files. After signing in, you can begin exploring all of the resources here. Everything is hands-on.

The vertical files are a great place to start your research. They include news clippings, oral histories, research notes, letters, photos, brochures, and more. These files provide background information and can also lead you to additional records in the collection. Our reference room also houses our collection of BC Directories dating from 1924 to 1999. Directories can be used like phone books to find businesses or people by name and by street address. They are a great resource if you are doing research on your family or on your house and neighbourhood.

Our reference book collection contains books on local, BC, and Canadian history. Browse over 1500 titles about fascinating people, places, and events. While these books do not circulate, many of them are also available through the public library.

If you aren't doing research and are simply interested in browsing our historical photos and artifacts, we also have several displays inside the reference room.

These displays are changed a few times a year and feature snapshots of life in Saanich.

As you begin your research, we suggest checking our finding aids. A finding aid is a type of guide or catalogue that tells you what records we have in our vault.

Digital versions are available on our website, but we also keep paper copies in the reference room.

If you find something in one of our finding aids that could be useful for your research, let us know and we can bring that material out of the vault for viewing.

Unlike the reference room material, our collections of original material are not hands-on, and researchers are asked to follow standard archives etiquette.

This includes having only one file open at a time, keeping documents in order, and handling material gently. No food or drink is permitted in the reference room and we ask that you only use pencil for taking notes.

You are welcome to take photographs of anything you see in the archives, but please keep the flash turned off to protect the material from the damaging effects of overexposure to light.

In addition to the finding aids, we also have lots of resources available on our website to help you get started on your research.

Whether you are researching the history of your house, your neighbourhood, or your ancestors, saanich.ca/archives has resources that can help.

Since 2007, we have digitized over 8000 photographs in our collection which are searchable through our photo search site.

Our photo search site also includes descriptions of our collection.

You can use the photos from our website for research purposes or private study but other uses, including electronic or printed publication, will need written permission.

For information on our terms of use and fees, please refer to our Photographic Reproduction and Use Policy at saanich.ca/archives.

Behind the scenes, our holdings are stored inside our climate controlled vault.

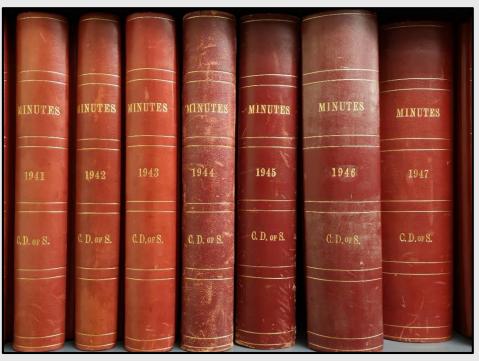

Our collection consists of approximately 60 percent municipal records and 40 percent community records. These include paper documents such as letters and maps and photos in the form of prints, slides, and even glass plate negatives.

The Archives acquires records for its collection in several ways. Municipal records are transferred from other departments, and community records are received by donation.

The municipal records in our collection date back to 1904, two years before Saanich was officially incorporated as a municipality. The collections include administrative files, correspondence, legal documents, voter's lists, minutes, maps, and plans. We also have reports relating to all aspects of the municipality such as Council business, the Clerk's and Mayor's offices, the Police and Fire Departments, and Planning and Public Works projects.

The private records in our collection date from the 1870s and include correspondence, financial and legal documents, scrapbooks, diaries, pamphlets, books, and other material collected by individual citizens, families, or organizations.

All material donated to the Archives is stored in our climate controlled vault. We monitor the temperature and relative humidity every day to ensure that the vault conditions are stable.

The fire suppression system in the vault uses compressed gas to remove the oxygen from the room rather than water sprinklers. This smothers the fire without risking water damage to the collection.

Although the Archives is located inside the Saanich Centennial Library, we keep different hours. Our reference room is open to visitors from Monday to Friday, 10 a.m. – 2:30 p.m.

If you are visiting the library after we've closed, you can still learn about Saanich history by checking out the displays we have set up around the library.

These displays, located in the foyer and next to the computer lab, are changed a few times a year and feature interesting stories about Saanich history.

Want to get involved? Join the Saanich Remembers WWI Project.

We need volunteers to help research names on the Saanich WWI Honour Roll and write short biographies of the soldiers for our website.

We'll preserve the collected information at Saanich Archives and share it on the project website.

For more information visit the Saanich Remembers WWI page at saanich.ca/archives.
